My Soul is in a Hurry
Mário de Andrade

I counted my years and realized that I have less time to live than the time I have lived so far.
I have more past than future.

I feel like that boy who had a bowl of cherries:
At first, he gobbled them, but when he realized that there were only a few left, he began to taste them intensely and passionately.

I do not have time for endless gatherings where statutes, rules,
processes,
And internal regularities are discussed, knowing, that nothing will be achieved.

I don’t have time anymore to bear absurd people,
Who despite their age have not grown.

I don’t have time anymore to fight the mediocrity.
I don’t want to participate in conversations, where inflated egos are parading.
I can’t stand manipulators and opportunists.
I am annoyed by those envious people, who seek to discredit the most able, in an attempt to take over their position and seize their talent and success.

My time is too short to discuss headlines. I'm aiming for the essential, as my soul is in a hurry - not so many cherries left.

I want to live close to people who are "human". Humans who laugh at their own weaknesses and are not terribly conceited about their success.

Humans, who do not consider themselves elected before their time. And humans, who take responsibility.

Humans, who defend human dignity and who are willing to stand for truth and uprightness. It is this, that makes life worth living.

I want to surround myself with people, who understand, how to touch the hearts of others. People who have learned through life's hard punches to grow by tender touches of the soul.

Yes, I am in a hurry. I am in a hurry to live with the intensity that only maturity can give, I do not intend to waste any of the remaining cherries. I am sure they will be exquisite, much more than those eaten so far.

My goal is to reach the end - contented. At peace with myself, my loved ones and my conscience. We have two lives, and the second one begins when you realise that you only have one.

Mário de Andrade (09.10.1893 - 25.02.1945) was a Brazilian poet, novelist, musicologist, art historian, critic, and photographer. He wrote one of the first and most influential collections of modern Brazilian poetry.

“Today we have a temporary aberration called “industrial capitalism” which is inadvertently liquidating its two most important sources of capital, the natural world and properly functioning societies. No sensible capitalist would do that.”

If you ask the wrong question, of course, you get the wrong answer. We find in design it’s much more important and difficult to ask the right question. Once you do that, the right answer becomes obvious.

De-growth – A Necessity

We must make our first priority in dealing with the earth the careful and strict preservation of the billion-year-old heritage achieved by the evolution of plant and animal life. We must preserve all the species, subspecies, varieties, communities, and ecosystems that we possibly can. We must not, through our actions, cause any more species to become extinct. To be sure, we cannot stop every death or extinction, since the death of living things is part of the inevitable workings of nature. But we can avoid adding to that fateful outcome.

Real Solution

Development has been equated with macro-economic growth by economists. Energy is the true driver of this growth. Energy is a hard-wired aspect of reality and follows the immutable laws of geology and thermodynamics.

Since the law of thermodynamics and geology do not bend for anyone, we will have to face the hard truth that perpetual economic growth as we define it is in fact over, and that we are intentionally racing towards a cliff of both economic and ecological collapse. De-growth is indeed reality, and we either deal with this reality or reality will deal with us.

Inwardly Sustainable

Ultimately, we need to see that sustainability is an ethical guiding principle which needs to inform all our activities: an ethic based upon reverence for all life, and upon the need to participate in and encourage life-enhancing activities in every sphere of existence - work, recreation, relationships etc. And this begins with each one of us personally. To paraphrase Confucius, we need to be inwardly sustainable - conscious, harmonized, trusting, loving to be able to create a sustainable world outside us. Mankind is being forced to develop a new, global consciousness for his survival.
